“Can I talk to you?” she whispered: Enhancing student learning with formative feedback tutorials

Can I talk to you?

MIDWAY THROUGH THE MSC TESOL MODULE, STUDENTS SUBMIT A FORMATIVE ASSIGNMENT

With these formative assignments, I can see how my students need to improve. I’ll give them written individual feedback, then I’ll collate the feedback to go through together in the next teaching session.

AFTER THE SESSION...

Hey, I think that worked well. They asked questions and seemed really engaged with the module and what they have to do in the assignment!

BUT THEN AT SUMMATIVE ASSESSMENT TIME...

“Suffering Sappho! Not all students used the formative feedback!”

REFLECTING, SHE WONDERS WHY NOT ALL STUDENTS COULD TRANSFORM FEEDBACK INTO IMPROVEMENT...

Hmm, my PG students seem to like chatting with me at the end of class. What about a face-to-face meeting? 1-2-1? Maybe more office hours? No, only the good, confident students ever visit. Wait, do I really have time? Am I giving them too much support already? How can I instil good practice in them?

...AND CONSIDERS WHAT TO DO NEXT.

Students like them too! ‘VALUABLE’, they say. ‘Useful interviews’, ‘a good opportunity to talk’ and ‘a way of ‘making time for all students’

SHE COMES UP WITH A PLAN!

Students like them too! ‘VALUABLE’, they say. ‘Useful interviews’, ‘a good opportunity to talk’ and ‘a way of ‘making time for all students’

WHY DID THIS WORK?

PG and International students want f2f time with lecturers
Demonstrates how assessment can be a meaningful process of and for learning
Provides structured support to encourage self-regulation and critical self-reflection
Meaningful and transferable